BEFORE the battle the front ran straight from north to south, through the Yartsevo sector, roughly three hundred and fifty miles west of Moscow. It was stabilized there during the summer battle of Simolensk. The rains came in September, soaking the dense pine and birch forests, spreading bogs in the turgid earth, washing out the dirt roads, and making mass movements im-possible. The sharpest advance was made in the center, where they reached the Viazma sector within a week and occupied the city in ten days. They reached the Kalinin region October 14, the Tula region, October 29. They were rolling fast, recklessly, sending out individual tanks with small groups of motorcyclists or cavairymen to scout, then flinging columns of tanks, with companies or battalions of motorized infantry, into spurting advances.

Suddenly the Red army's resistance stiffened on the flanks, Kalinin fell, but in the forests behind the upper Volga fresh Russian armies converged on the German spearhead stopped it in the suburbs of Kalinin. Tula refused to fall. The German center, receiving no support from the flanks, dared not advance alone on Moscow. Thus, in mid-October,

Only a Good Beginning

FALL of Soily was another step in the representations of the United Nations toward what was once referred to as Hitler's Europe and it was the beginning of the invasion of Axis nomedands.

If the American and the British people get the idea that it is a decisive battle in this total war, it may prove to be no victory at all. If we let down in our efforts on the war front or onthe home front because we have pushed the Nazis off the island or rounded them up in prison camps, it may even turn into a victory for Hitler's generals.

As War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes already has stated so pointedly, we have met and defeated less than seven per cent of the combat divisions the enemy has in the European area. Even if Italy is knocked completely out of the war, as now seems inevitable, Germany will still have more combat divisions in Europe than the albes can bring against them at this time.

The United Nations armies have shown their striking power, first in Africa and then in Sicily. They have shown that, given enough equipment, they can meet and beat the best that the enemy can send against them.

In both of these theaters of action, however, we had everwhelming superiority in the air and possibly also in both manpower and In mechanical equipment, these being in the realm of military secrets. We will have this superlority when we push up through the Italian mainland. When we reach those areas where the Nazis will put up their real defense, we will retain superiority only if production and transport are kept at their highest levels.

Sicily is further proof that the American fighting man has no superior. Responsibility for maintaining the march to Berlin rests with the folks at home.

From the men in service there's no complaint about study and drilling up to 15 hours a day. There is only eagerness to get into the big job.

When the same spirit fills the home front this job will be over sooner than we think but a good beginning doesn't give any of us the right to think that the job is over and that we can begin to look upon the war as a prinic

Memories of Lindbergh

MOST of the world heard of Lellourget airport at Paris 16 years ago when Charles Lindbergh landed there on the first non stop solo Atlantic flight to mark a milestone in aviation history.

The world heard of it again when American Flying Fortresses made a visit to blast the airport which is now used by the Nazis for their own purposes.

Within the period encompassed by these dates lies most of the history of the development of aviation. Mr. Lindbergh made the flight by stripping his plane to the barest essentials, by a flying skill which won the acclaim of the world and by the greatest of good fortune. Today other planes fly the Atlantic in a procession of roaring wings and their passage is too commonplace to attract more than passing notice from the fishermen over whose boats they soar on their flight to England and thence to the embattled reaches of the skies.

The Best Labor Day

MOST of America's workers will respond to the appeal of the War Production Board that they observe Labor day this year by working as usual.

Production, while increasing, is still behind the goals which had been set and there is a chance to gain a full day by operating as usual

The day was set apart to honor labor's contribution to the nation's prosperity and its security. This honor can best be shown by a day of work in which labor makes an effort to turn out an extra bit of production.

The best Labor day will be one which will see new records in the making of the ships and the guns and the planes and all the other things which safeguard labor's right to the most privileges, the highest pay and the finest home life enjoyed by workers anywhere on the face of the earth.

How About the Time

OHIO cities ought to be deciding what, if anything, they are going to do about their clocks this fall,

When the state of Ohio voted out war time last spring and set the statehouse clock back an hour, practically all communities decided that they would string along with the rest of the country on fast time, inasmuch as the days were getting longer anyhow. They said they would think it over again in the fall.

Days are geiting shorter and if there is to be any change it should come soon. Unlike the weather, time is something about which we can do something if we are so inclined.

The first necessary step to postwar jobs is to make it possible for industry to accumulate sufficient funds to reconvert from a war economy to peacetime operations. The earnings which industry should set aside are being taxed away .- Frederick C. Crawford, president National Association of Manufacturers.

All other taxes are levied on profits. You have to make money before you are taxed. In this tremendous taxation program, the government would collect before earnings are computed. The tax would be a capital levy on a business not making money. It would help big business monopolies, where high prices provide profits. It would be destructive to small or independent business. It would confiscate worker and business savings and hide them in a stagnant government pool. Maintenance of Full Employment is Duty of a Modern State.

By WALTER LIPPMANN

In the first article of this series, great American historian, F. J. Turner, called "the disappearance ure to make a workable peace" of the frontier." after 1918 was due to three cardi-nal errors. First, we dissoved the that they could find, in the open followed a policy of inaction at home when we should have recognized that the maintenance of full employment is now a primary objective of national policy. Third, in our commercial and financial dealings with foreign countries we behaved as if we were still a debtor nation, and therefore we helped provoke the great economic crisis which began in 1928-'29. These three errors, I argued, have a common root; our thinking and our policies have been from twenty-five to fifty years behind the realities, and the ef-fort to live in the twentieth concentury led to military insecurity, economic disaster, and social up-

The first point I shall pass over very briefly here for it is already widely discussed, and is much better understood, throughout the country. We may summarize the argument by saying that in the perience. nineteenth century the vital interests of the United States were adequately safeguarded. Our mtereds were confined to the defense of the Western hemisphere, and they coincided, as against all other powers, with those of Britare, which until about 1900 exeri sed an undisputed command of the seas.

Interests Extended

By the beginning of the twentieth century, beweser, Americaninto ests were extended from the Western Hemisphere neross the Pacific Ocean to the Philippines and maced, to the China Coast. At the same time, first Germany and then Japan emerged to challenge British and American commore of the seas. In the twen-tieth century, therefore, the United States foreign policy of the nineteenth was inadequate, and as a result we have been involved in two world wars which we were unable to prevent, wo chiwe were unprepated to tight, and, unless we change our policy this time. which we have not known how to settle even when we had won-

The aggressor states prepared for that war, While was a come; the defending states did not prepare for it, which was also a come, and it has very nearly cost them their national

Let us now examine the second point, which is that in the '20s, mandately after the other war. we did not recognize that the militenance of full employment is the duty of a modern state, subject of an hysterical and illit-Wien did this become the duty of erate quarrel among back politia modern state' in the United clans, then our hopes of peace and States during the generation which order are doomed to disappointfollowed the settlement of our ment, Western country and what the For unless we can demonstrate alliance which had won the war spaces, work and a new life, they when we should have kept it to would no longer accept, as if it preserve the peace. Second, we followed a policy of inaction at unemployment which had been supposed to be an unavoidable aspect of the so-called business

Being cifizens and voters they were bound to turn to the government and demand a remedy for unemployment. Therefore, in this century the only question has been whether the remedles would be sound or unsound. There are only a tew doctrinaire economists and business men left who deny that a remedy must be sought.

Alternatives

There are, however, many who wonder whether a sound remedy tury as if it were the nineteenth | can be found. The answer to these doubters is that we have to try, that willy-nilly we have to learn by trial and error, and finally that in making the effort we now have, as we did not have twenty-five years ago, a formidable body of economic science and a great deal of practical ex-

There are two grand alternative methods of achieving and maintaining full employment. The one is the collectivist method by which economic action is planned, directed, and even administered by the central government. The other method, which rests on free enterprise and competition, is most accurately described as a compensated economy. In such an economy the function of government is to enact laws which preserve and foster freedom of enterprise, of contract, of property, of labor, and of association. This is done to preserve and proteet them against monopoly, duress, and socially undesirable practices of all kinds. At the same time it is the function of government to compensate by positive measures-such as central banking policy, flexible taxation, insurance, social services, and public works-for the deficiencies which free private enterprise cannot alone deal with.

Within these two grand alternatives there are many variations. There is much that is grey for all not black or white. But one thing is certain; it is that free enterprise cannot be maintained in the twentieth century under nuncteenth century laussez-faire. Free enterprise requires government action to maintain it by regulating it, and also to compensate its tendency to booms and crashes which produce involuntary mass unemployment. A great deal depends, therefore, on whether we are able after this war to agree that the avoidance of mass unemployment is a national duty, and to act accordingly. If we do not agree, if every positive measure is to be made the

Chance To Prove Theory

Airmen See Opportunity To Collapse Italy.

BY JACK STINNETT

WASHINGTON—If Italy should fold up quickly the laugh fold up quickly the laugh would be on our modern Billy Mitchells of the air force.

The reason: They might never have an opportunity to prove their chief contention that a nation can be bombed out of the

It will take history to prove the point, but the story already is leaking out here that when the United Nations armed forces bigwigs assembled around the strategy table, the air-minded enthusiasts had the balance of power and persuaded the others that our second big objective in the European theater should be Sicily.

Their sole reason was to prove to the military and civilian world that a nation could be bombed out of the war.

It's no particular secret that the British strategists had other ideas—their preference being the retaking of Crete and a drive through Greece and the Balkans. They had sound strategic reasons but their selection of that route was also colored by sentiment and national military pride,

They wanted to hit back in the same quarter where they had suffered one of their worst defeats. The French, on the other hand, wanted to get back to France as soon as possible. Even when he North African campaign was planned, they were insisting on direct invasion of the coasts of to ourselves that with our resources and our industrial skill we have the wit to provide useful and profitable work for those who are able and willing to work, we shall once more, as we did in the '20s lose the peace after we had won the war. We are now such a preponderant part of the economy of the world that unless here at home we attain the stability of full employment, we shall be a force for disorder rather than for order everywhere.

It is upon a policy of full employment at home, achieved by denestic policy, that we must found our post-war foreign economic policy. For our greatest contribution to world prosperity s a prosperity in the United States which makes us a good market for imports and not overanxious about pushing our ex-

That brings us to the third point, which will be treated in my next article-the proper baiancing of our foreign accounts in view of the fact that we have been a creditor nation ever since the first World War.

Ottawa, O., Flier Credited with Four Japanese Planes

SOMEWHERE IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC. Aug. 18 - (Delayed) First Lieut, Shelsion Hali of near Ottawa, O., & Marine Corps fighter pilot, was credited today with downing a Japanese beginn and causing a Zero to crash without firing a single shot at it.

The two Jap planes brought Lieutenant Hall's total to four, one short of an acc.

The air haitle took place over Kolombangara island in the Solomons, when Lieut. Hall's squadron stumbled over a formation of twin-engined Jap bombers with an escort of Zeros,

"I dived on him and let my guns go, but everything happened so fast up there I don't know whether I got him or not.

"Right below me I saw another bomber. I decided to make sure of this one. Easing down in hehind him, I held my guns on him as long as possible. He exploded like a ffremacker.

"It was then I realized that there was a Zero after my blood. He was right on my tail, I plunged nto a cloud bank in an attempt to shake him, but he stuck like fly-

"All this was about 4,000 feet up, and I thought I'd try out-diving my pursuer. I shoved the stick forward and the plane lunged downward. The stayed right with me. That is until just a few feet above the water. "When the waves were almost lapping at my plane's helly, I pulled out of the dive in a sharp right turn. The Zero tried to follow me and that's where he made hls mistake. One of his wings snapped off and he hit the water like a ton of bricks."

When Lieut, Hall's squadron returned to its base, it was found that out of the gramble it had netted 11 bombers and five Zeros, against the loss of only one plane.
